According to Dr. Dennis Schimpf of Sweetgrass Plastic Surgery, there are a couple of tell-tale signs that Melania Trump may have had a facelift. "She appears to have a scar in front of her ear, known as a pretragal incision — a common approach to a facelift," he explains. He also notes subtle but significant changes in the shape of her ears and the tightness of her neck, both classic indicators of a facelift.

Backing up this theory, another board-certified surgeon, Dr. Sean McNally, has a really similar analysis (via Irish Star): "If you look real close there's two things to note. One, her earlobe has what we call a pixie shape. There also appears to be a very faint light line just in front of her ear running down to the edge of her earlobe."

Beyond the facelift, Dr. Schimpf also tells us he believes she had a brow lift, known as a canthoplasty. "When comparing her eyes to how she originally had a rounder, almond-shaped eye, which is a common trait. Today, her eyes appear more slanted and angled upwards. This is a sign of a lift with a possible temporal brow lift," he points out. Trump is unrecognizable in throwback photos that were taken before her plastic surgery.
